Identification S00702

Short Course

Skills Academy Provider Program

Police use identification procedures for numerous reasons. In some circumstances, the police identify a suspect during an investigation and use the identification procedure to test a witness' ability to identify the suspect as the perpetrator. In other instances, the identification procedure is used as an investigative tool to further an investigation. In addition to this Forensic identification has revolutionised the way that criminal investigation occurs and has had an enormous impact on the criminal justice system and many other important areas. A positive identification might form probable cause for a search warrant or the apprehension and subsequent questioning of a suspect, or both.

Magic Info About This Course

There are numerous ways that DNA profiles can be used for forensic identification. In fact, their applications are not only vital for proving guilt, but also for proving innocence. DNA forensic identification can allow for a potential suspect in a crime to be identified. This is why evidence left at a crime scene can be so crucial, particularly when it is DNA evidence, therefore this course is an essential criteria for anyone wishing to go into this field

Upgrade Your Course With Accredited Unit Standards

You can upgrade your course to receive Unit Standard Credits on the NQF. These credits can add up to a full qualification, accredited by SASSETA.

Please note that if the syllabus, or the study materials or the assessments change, then you run the risk of having to redo your Skills programme when you need to upgrade to the accredited unit standards. So to avoid this risk, you should upgrade as soon as you have finished your Skills course.

1. For a full programme, you have six months after completing with Skills Academy to upgrade.
2. For a short course, you have three months after completing a subject with Skills Academy.

You will need to refer to the learning materials you got from Skills Academy. So you should hold on to your study materials, and if you want to upgrade, do it as soon as you have completed your course with Skills Academy.
